

ABSTRACT

A device for the administration of basic active agents, in particular nicotine, to the human or animal body by means of inhalation comprises a first preparation containing nicotine base or/and a further basic active agent and, furthermore, a second or further preparations, whereby at least one preparation contains at least one volatile acid suitable for inhalation.